His name is Wang, but the v illagers call him "Sell Coal Old Man". He has been sellin g charcoal for over 40 years, since he was as young as Wang&#39 ;s son is now.Wang's story begins in the early 80s w hen China started to open up. At that time, there were no gas sto ves or electric heaters in rural areas. People relied on firewood o r charcoal to keep warm during harsh winters. Wang saw an opp ortunity and started his business.<img src="/static-img/ YreOpWf30WymLKqpDCryenzMeFr1yKzmQqj0_exPdK47I2p-WFr 7CKYwsHox6YlXWMBFvFdbunej9lxOf_OdpS3xq4OSmkIU3-wNK1 iMMp_M_o4Akv25WX-lgHpJdlcxL8P-nMTvUaW3kh2ff9-Q5tVOSj GscI8Z-Lk1uV1FDWBCQUpwNPYXFsqYBwZT0ntt.jpg"> e would wake up at dawn every day to collect firewood from the mountains nearby. The work was backbreaking - he had to carry heavy loads of wood down steep slopes through dense forests but it paid well enough for him to support his family. wever, life wasn't easy for Wang. In the early days of his bu siness, many people couldn't afford charcoal and preferred using free firewood from their own lands instead. To make matt ers worse, some unscrupulous competitors would sell substand ard products at lower prices than Wang could manage. img src="/static-img/8PYUvKvqUbFLFwq1COIrdHzMeFr1yKzmQ qj0_exPdK47I2p-WFr7CKYwsHox6YlXWMBFvFdbunej9lxOf_OdpS 3xa4OSmkIU3-wNK1iMMp M o4Akv25WX-lgHpJdlcxL8P-nMTvU
